Outstanding lawyers and a sound legal system are prerequisites of any civilised society. The legal system provides the rules within which the State’s administration, the business world, individuals and organisations – indeed the whole community – operate. In any country in which the law reigns supreme, lawyers must apply legal rules and act as watchdogs to ensure that everyone adheres to the norms of society. Because the law plays such an immense and far-reaching role, legal studies cover a wide and exciting field: the rules of the tough business world and the business entities operating within it; the protection of human rights; intimate family relationships; the prosecution of criminals; and the conclusion of contracts, to name but a few. This serves as proof of the variety of disciplines to which law students will be exposed during their studies, as well as the wide-ranging experience that they will gain.

The Faculty of Law at the University of Johannesburg has a team of lecturers in the legal fraternity that provide legal education of the highest order. These lecturers are also involved in legal research, which has a huge influence on new legislation and the decisions of South African courts. No fewer than 20 of the law lecturers have doctoral degrees in law, and another 25 have master’s degrees. It comes as no surprise, therefore, that our law students are well sought after in the legal and commercial worlds and in the public service. If you join this Faculty, you will become part of a rich tradition. You will also become part of a student body that values its ties with the Faculty, and we hope you will remain proud and loyal even after your studies have been completed.

<td>Degree info</td>
<td>The LLB degree is the minimum academic qualification for practising law in South Africa. To become an attorney or advocate you need an LLB degree. The LLB degree will equip students with both practical and theoretical skills to enter the legal profession. This is a focused degree, with emphasis on legal subjects and lays a solid foundation for a career and future in law.</td>
<td>Students interested in commerce, economic and management sciences and business subjects are ideal for the BCom (Law) degree. Core subjects within the Faculty of Economic and Financial Sciences and the Faculty of Management are covered together with specific legal subjects. This degree ensures a broad perspective on both legal and commercial issues and lays an excellent foundation for a more advanced study of the law.</td>
<td>The BA (Law) degree is ideal for students with a keen interest in languages and social sciences. Studying BA (Law) enriches your understanding of human behaviour and social issues, while it lays an excellent foundation for a more advanced study of the law. The BA (Law) degree is compiled in such a way that you take law modules and a number of non-law modules in each year of study.</td>

Take note: After completing a 3 year BCom (Law) or BA (Law) degree students can register for an LLB degree and will be able to complete this degree within a further 2 years, thus obtaining two qualifications within 5 years. This gives you the opportunity to practise as an attorney or advocate with an even broader academic background.
Things you might not know...

- After completing a BA (Law) or BCom (Law) degree it is possible to do an honours degree in a specialised discipline other than law.
- After completion of your LLB degree you can enrol for a specialised Master’s degree in law (if you comply with the relevant selection and admission criteria).
- If you are currently in Gr. 12, you apply to study at the University with your final Gr.11 results, not your Gr. 12 results. You will, however, finally be selected or admitted on your final Gr. 12 results.
  If you have already finished Gr. 12, you apply with your final Gr. 12/matric results (thus your matric certificate).
- It is very important that you apply in time. Don’t miss closing dates as the Faculty only accepts a certain number of students per year.
- What is an APS? APS is short for Admission Points Score. This is the score used to determine whether a prospective student can be admitted to study a degree in the Faculty of Law. It is easy to calculate the APS score – it is basically the sum of the achievement ratings for the 6 best prescribed school subjects (each achievement rating is calculated on a sliding scale).
  Take note that the performance rating for the subject Life Orientation is not taken into account in this calculation. See the next page for the full admission requirements and the APS scale.

A frequently asked question…

What’s the difference between an attorney and an advocate?
Attorneys and advocates share the same qualifications (at least an LLB degree). The difference exists in the type of work done on a daily basis.

Attorneys
Attorneys can be considered as the general practitioners of the legal profession. Their clients are members of the general public (both corporate entities and private individuals). The attorney consults with a client to identify the legal problem faced by the client and to analyse the various options available to the client in law to protect his, her or its rights. Much of an attorney’s day is divided between consultations with clients and advocates, drafting court documents, drafting letters, interviewing witnesses, interviewing experts, conducting research in regard to legal questions, advising clients, and generally performing the administrative tasks necessary to run a successful practice. While attorneys may specialise in a particular aspect of law (for example motor vehicle accident claims or intellectual property), often an attorney deals with a wide variety of matters ranging from matters concerning family law, to those concerning corporate law, the law of delict, the law of contract, and even matters of a criminal law nature.

Advocates

Advocates, on the other hand, are said to be specialist litigators and orators. Their clients may not come from the public. They are “briefed” by attorneys in order to argue the case – in a court, tribunal or forum – of the attorney’s client. Much of the advocate’s work involves going to court to present the cases prepared by the attorney. Additionally, advocates conduct legal research, draft legal documents (or consider and amend legal documents drafted by their instructing attorney) and consult with witnesses, the attorney’s client and experts together with the instructing attorney. Once an advocate has reached a degree of seniority in the profession, he/she may be given the status of Senior Counsel (SC). Generally, in larger and more important cases, a Senior Counsel will take the lead with the assistance of a junior advocate.
