Thesis: Principles for understanding, encouraging and rewarding voluntary tax compliance.

Supervisor: Prof EM Stack

Co-supervisor: Prof D Coetsee

Bornman, Marina (PhD)

Marina Bornman obtained her BCom degree, Postgraduate Diploma in Education and BCom (honours) from the Rand Afrikaans University and her MCom in South African and International Taxation from North-West University. She is currently a lecturer at the Department of Commercial Accounting, University of Johannesburg, where she lectures in the area of taxation. She also holds the designation and SARS practising licence: Master Tax Practitioner (SA)TM. Her areas of research include tax compliance behaviour, tax literacy and tax education. She has a passion for supervising and mentoring postgraduate students in taxation.

The majority of taxpayers in South Africa are voluntarily compliant, but it is the non-compliers who attract the most attention from revenue authorities. This study investigated a new approach to encouraging tax compliance, namely to reward taxpayers for their voluntary compliant behaviour, which is an important emerging area of research. The original contribution of the thesis is twofold. Firstly, it defines the concept of voluntary tax compliance and creates a framework to understand voluntary tax compliance to aid in further research. The concept of voluntary tax compliance was defined as the acceptance of a tax obligation by a taxpayer without external intervention, driven by personal and internalised social norms. Secondly detailed analyses of reward practices and empirical testing of the knowledge and attitudes of small business owners regarding the rewards on tax compliance led to principles and recommendations that could be considered by tax authorities when assessing possible strategies of rewarding tax compliance behaviour. The empirical work found that the majority of the respondents were in favour of being rewarded for their compliant behaviour, if the reward was perceived as having value and if it was an indication of appreciation for their effort in meeting their tax obligations.
