Professor Veli works at the intersection of epistemology, ethics, and social epistemology. At the moment, her focus is on epistemic injustice, decolonising knowledge, and the ways in which phenomena such as white ignorance should make us rethink central normative-epistemology concepts like epistemic reasons, risk, blame, and responsibility. She is the author of Believable Evidence (CUP 2017), and the editor of Epistemic Decolonisation (2020) and of The Factive Turn in Epistemology (CUP 2018). Before joining the University of Johannesburg in 2015, Veli taught and researched at Universität Wien, Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México, Rhodes University (her alma mater), and Cambridge (where she obtained her PhD).

Her recent publications include:

Book(s)

2017 Believable Evidence. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Edited work(s)

2022 (with R. McIntyre and S. Salem) Skepticism, Relativism, Pluralism. Special Issue of Inquiry. Routledge.

2020 Epistemic Decolonisation. Special Issue of Philosophical Papers, 49 (2).

2018 The Factive Turn in Epistemology. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

And many research articles in reputed journals.
