Money Laundering

Money laundering is one of the most serious financial offences that can be committed under South African law. Penalties range up to R1 billion and life imprisonment. These offences can be committed negligently by businesses as well as their managers and employees who fail to comply with their duties under the anti-laundering legislation. In practice, it is often challenging to interpret the law correctly and to ensure that the business is compliant. The environment has been made even more challenging by the adoption of related legislation regarding corruption and financing of terrorism. This programme was developed to enable students to form an understanding of the law and the practical implications of money laundering control in an international and a national context.

The Programme

In 2000, the Centre for the Study of Economic Crime at RAU took the initiative to develop one of the first university programmes in money laundering control internationally. Following the establishment of the University of Johannesburg on 1 January 2005, this programme was continued by the new university. More than 2 000 senior regulators, compliance officers, investigators and prosecutors in Southern Africa have already completed this programme. It has also developed into a core module of the University's Postgraduate Diploma in Compliance.

Programme Format and Duration

The programme in Money Laundering Control is presented during February. Contact tuition is compressed into a three-day programme at the Auckland Park Kingsway Campus of the University of Johannesburg. Students will submit assignments and write a final examination in May.

NB: Attendance of the three day workshop is compulsory.

Who Should Attend?
